Moods are also positively affected by it as it affects brain chemicals. • Water Play: It is important for children to learn fine motor skills and hand-eye coordination through activities such as pouring, scrubbing, squirting, stirring, and squeezing. • Sand Play: With tactile play with sand, not only is the touch sense engaged, but also the senses of sight, hearing, smell, and movement as well. By engaging their sensory system, the child gains a holistic experience, strengthening their sensory modulations. • Food trials: In this food preparation process, the child is gradually exposed to different food textures, smells, and tastes. These sensory experiences are intended to reduce anxiety and fear.
